

With the American High Seas Fleet in Southern waters. Sailors are shown putting up the floating targets at which the big and little guns on the dreadnoughts will roar as the ships sweep along in battle formation and at battle speed.

An idle hour on the deck of one of Uncle Sam's leviathans. Notice that some of the men are putting in the time studying. The noses of two of the big guns just show on either side. To the rear are steaming other big ships on a practice cruise.

A peep at the line of march on the sea from the deck of a battleship during a recent visit somewhere down South. It was a quiet day when this picture was taken.

Another view of the Kaiser in a picture that has just reached this country. It shows William in the act of decorating one of his Generals and, apparently, of shaking hands with him.

American soldiers and sailors in London turned aside from martial occupations on Feb. 7 to pay a tribute to the memory of Charles Dickens. Edwin Drew, founder of the Dickens Society, is seen with a party of them going to Westminster Abbey to place a wreath on the novelist's tomb on the 106th anniversary of his birth.
