The Cuban soldiers' warrant business, in which many of others were interested with Ceballos & Co., is complicated. That single matter alone demands as much attention, time and energy as would ordinarily require an entire assignee.

FIFTH AVENUE PLANS.

yesterday, might be considered interesting under the circumstances. The Union League Club, which has a space of lawn and small fence between the sidewalk and the building, may have to lose that touch of country.

It is generally admitted that the carrying out of any official orders will mar Fifth avenue to a great extent. The slicing off of stoops, removal of porticoes, filling of areas and courts and drawing back of columns and pillars will cost many hundreds of thousands of dollars, not only to property owners, but to the city as well.

But before anything of a compulsory nature can be done it is believed that the city will have every legal technicality that astute lawyers can devise to fight against and overcome.

The Knickerbocker Trust Company will not stand in the way of any city improvements. If it is to be singled out of all property owners it will defend itself. We shall wait and see what other property owners intend doing before moving ourselves.

The city's fight against the Knickerbocker Trust Company was begun in 1903 by an unknown taxpayer bringing to the attention of the city the disquisitions of the defendant company. George L. Rives was Corporation Counsel at the time, and John J. Delany continued the litigation, the decision being handed down after Mr. Delany resigned and Mr. Ellison succeeded him.

The project of Corporation Counsel Ellison to widen Fifth avenue is in direct contrast with the idea of the city fathers when the street was first laid out. At that time a thoroughfare of one hundred feet was provided for, allowing for fifteen feet from the sidewalk on each side for property owners to enclose for porticoes or a courtyard.

Mr. Ellison, in explaining his proposed action, takes the same ground that John D. Crimmins did in 1901, when Mr. Crimmins held that the city should claim its own. There was such a storm of protest at the time, however, that the proposal of Mr. Crimmins was dropped. Mr. Ellison explained the proposed widening by saying:

The increase in traffic in Fifth avenue has rendered it imperative that the city widen that thoroughfare. Fifth avenue has become a street of trade, and we dare not refuse to face the problem any longer. It is admitted that the changes will entail great expense and much inconvenience, but the city owns that land, is entitled to it, and is going to seek to recover it. I intend to serve notice on all the property owners to remove all encroaching property. If this is done we will be enabled to take six feet off the sidewalks and add it to the roadway, which is now only forty feet wide.

INVENTOR FOUND DEAD.

Graduate of Oxford University Asphyxiated in Bed.

A man known as Colonel Charles Heaton, a chemist, mineralogist and inventor, was found dead yesterday in his office on the second floor of No. 102 West 127th street.

The body of Heaton, who had not been seen since Monday afternoon, was found lying on the bed, fully dressed. Two gas jets were burning in the next room, which was apparently used as a laboratory, while the gas jet in the room he was found in was turned on, but not lit.

A milkman, who had noticed for the last two days that one of the rooms was well illuminated at midday, notified Hugo Bierbon, Heaton's partner. Bierbon obtained a ladder, and, looking through the transom, saw his partner on the bed. Bierbon said last night that he did not believe that Colonel Heaton had committed suicide. He said that he found the flashlight and a note pinned to the wall, which was a note from him to take his life.

From papers found in his pockets it was shown that Heaton was born in England, about 1870, and was a graduate of Oxford University with the degree of bachelor of arts. Other papers showed that Heaton has a brother living in Australia, and a sister, Mrs. John Sherrwood, living at Guilford, Chemung County, N. Y.

Treubig was arraigned before Magistrate Wahle in the Essex Market court and held in $5,000 bail on the charge of felonious assault and carrying a dangerous weapon.

NEW RULE FOR IRELAND.

Main Features of Government Plan Said To Be Agreed To.

Dublin, Nov. 8.—"The Evening Herald" declares that it has trustworthy information that at a recent conference attended by James Bryce, Chief Secretary for Ireland, John Redmond, leader of the Irish party in the House of Commons; John Dillon, Member of Parliament for East Mayo, and Sir Antony Patrick MacDonnell, under secretary to the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Sir Antony read the draft of a plan for the reorganization of the government of Ireland. The draft provided for the establishment of a central, or caste, board, an educational department and a department of agriculture, and for the transfer of land.

It created an Irish council, with between two-thirds and three-fourths of its members elected on the existing Parliamentary franchise and the remainder on a restricted franchise. Clergymen of all denominations would be eligible for membership in the council. Ireland would retain her present representation in Parliament; the police would remain under imperial control, but the force would be reduced and the judiciary would remain unaffected.
