TO DISCUSS WAYS TO PREVENT BLINDNESS

Workers for Sightless Will Meet in Washington Thursday in Two-Day Session.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Workers for the blind will meet in the nation's capital Thursday in a two-day session to discuss ways to prevent blindness.

The meeting is the first of its kind in Washington and is sponsored by the American Foundation for the Blind. The organization is working to improve conditions for the blind and to educate the public about the need for preventive measures.

The agenda includes discussions on the latest research in eye disease, the role of early intervention programs, and strategies for increasing awareness of blindness prevention.

The attendees, who represent a diverse array of organizations and individuals dedicated to the cause of vision, will have the opportunity to share ideas and experiences and to network with others in the field.

The event is an important step in the ongoing effort to make the world a more inclusive and accessible place for all.
