MISS DOROTHY KNIGHT.

LAUNCHING OF THE WYOMING

Battleship Glides Down Ways Into Delaware River.

VICAR CAREY IS PRESENT AT CEREMONY

Interesting Story of the Life of Old Warship of Same Name.

BY J. A. BRECKONS.
The Tribune.
PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 25.—Waving banners and shouting lustily, more than two score citizens were massed on the bank when Miss Dorothy Knight, the girl who christened the Wyoming, immediately after the launch.

Dr. Carey outlined the progress of the navy by citing the achievements of the former Wyoming, which was built in the China seas. He particularly pointed out that the ship should be launched from the western states as a matter of fact in Pennsylvania.

Wyoming had three killed and several wounded. As she neared the Japanese vessels her flag was run up with cheers by the crew and it was at once saluted by the shore battery of four guns. Soon the American ship was in front of the town and, dashing in between the steamer and the two brigs, was soon abreast of the Koshin, which immediately fired a broadside. The Koshin was not able to do much damage, her guns being pointed up the channel, but so near were the two vessels that their sides nearly touched. As the Wyoming went between the two vessels she fired both broadsides and every shot found its billet. Now the inevitable happened. The Wyoming cleared the steamer and steamed away toward the southern shore, and all the shore batteries fired their range again concentrated their firing upon her and she grounded—but, despite that fact and the holes torn in her sides by shells, she still kept up a vigorous firing. But McDougal was not content to fight with his ship in the mud, so he set the propeller to work to get off, and this being fortunately a most powerful one, she soon floated again.

Sinking of the Koshin.
Ignoring one of the brigs, which was sinking, the Wyoming paid all her attention to the Koshin, which had slipped the anchor and was making for the shore. The American's bow gun now got in its good work and the second shot pierced the Koshin's side, passed through the vessel, came out at the other side and exploded in the town, half a mile away. The disabled ship was now a scene of terror and confusion. Her officers left in the small boats, leaving the crew to jump overboard just as the steamer sank from sight, and then give all their attention to the shore guns. The Koshin was soon disabled and worthless, and, with the Wyoming, the Wyoming, one of which was completely demolished.

A Remarkable Victory.
Summing up the whole engagement, the American vessel stands out as something remarkable in the annals of naval history. Under the fire of three ships, and at one time or another from eight batteries and either one or two redoubts, before she got through she sank two of the ships, made a lame duck of the third, went aground and worked off again, disabled one of the batteries and silenced several others. She carried only six guns herself, but had opposed to her no less than ninety-two. For this episode the United States collected $12,000, part of which went to the owners of the Pombrake.

BULLET ENDS LIFE OF TONY VON PHUL

Fatal Outcome of a Quarrel Which Started Over Woman at Denver.

DENVER, May 25.—Jealousy aroused in St. Louis several months ago by favor shown the two by a woman there and fanned into flames in Denver by the discovery that they were rivals for the favor of a Denver society leader, it is believed caused the trouble that ended last night in the fatal shooting of St. Louis (Tony) von Phul of St. Louis by Harold E. Henwood, who represents a New York promoting company in Denver. Von Phul was shot down in the barroom of the Brown Palace hotel as the hour approached midnight, and in the fusillade from Henwood's gun two bystanders were wounded. One of the wounded, George Edward Copeland, a rich mining man of Victor, Colo., was shot twice, once in the right hip and again in the left leg, and the other, James W. Atkinson, a wealthy contractor of Colorado Springs, received a bullet in the left thigh. Copeland is in a serious condition, while Atkinson's recovery, according to attending physicians, will be speedy.

Von Phul died twelve hours after he was shot down. Three bullets penetrated his body, the last lodging in his spine. The surgeons pronounced this wound fatal in almost every instance, but in spite of this warning von Phul left the smoking-room after his wound was treated, and walked into the open air. He was found several minutes later on the sidewalk conversing with a group of men over the shooting.
