A modest little note, delicately and suggestively scented with the breath of inner refinement, and breathing of the ideal type so long and ardently craved by present-day men of the world, arrived in this morning's mail. A society woman, and a mother, had sent it.
"Can you, dear Lady Gay," so the note ran, "without divulging my name in its connection, touch upon the long-desired denouement of the disgraceful condition which is getting to be so noticeable upon the public thoroughfares as summer advances? I mean the décolleté frocks for school and street wear which so many shameless mothers of the community are permitting their daughters to wear."
"Every time I motor to town I pass them in numbers on the cars, and every time I sit in my motor without some shop in the very heart of the business district they pass by singly and in groups in incredible degrees of low-neckedness, ranging from the Dutch curve to little better than formal décolleté."
"I have daughters of my own who have been too carefully reared to see beauty in vulgar display, and whom I should blush in genuine dismay to see flaunting their sweet young beauty with such careless abandon on public streets, and I am sorely tempted to speculate just what standard of morality is boasted of by those all too indulgent but near-sighted mothers who allow it!"
So, it has come at last, the womanly protest!
It has been for some time a matter of comment among women as well as those men who are wont to collect in groups on the curb, this very topic so aptly discussed by the lady of the dainty stationery.
And it does seem cause for regret that tender young girlhood should be so indelicately flaunted for the benefit of the eyes of the less discriminating and unscrupulous, whose casual remarks and jesting banter are not always characterized by genteel refinement.
Nothing the world over is sweeter to a man or woman who is part of it than that modesty which is growing so rare, but which adversely to its decline will always inspire a more invaluable regard and fascination.
Modesty in its natural unaffectedness has from the beginning of time been proved the guiding string to a woman's most ornate accomplishments, and has been a monument to our mothers, and our mother's mothers, which never has been effaced.
If a woman, even under the most pardonable circumstances of her worldly experiences possess not modesty, she realizes that she has lost her greatest and most intangible feminine charm, which defies substitution in all the long and varied category of the arts of fascination.
But if a young girl be immodest she has killed an indefinable quality somewhat akin to respect in those very individuals for whose delectation and admiration she has wilfully relinquished that which most respectable women are the most reluctant to surrender!
Let young girls remember that often the most ravishing of women have been dismal failures even in their apparent conquests of men, where others by their simplicity of soul, their innocence and purity of clinging love have soared to the very top-notch of the pinnacle of success!

SOCIAL NEWS OF THE DAY.
One of the most elaborate parties of the season was that at which Mrs. James A. Kennedy entertained yesterday at her mansion on Victoria street, when in a bower of ferns and American Beauty roses thirteen tables of bridge were contested.
The card tables were arranged in groups throughout the large living room, music room, library and lanai, which was screened in by palms and hanging baskets of various kinds of maidenhair and the drooping Boston fern.
Throughout the rooms, whose harmonious ensemble is noted, tall graceful pedestals and side tables bloomed with huge cut glass punch bowls and tall epergnes filled with long stemmed American Beauty roses, and the air was fragrant with these rare blossoms and overgrown pots of maidenhair in riotous luxuriance.
Mrs. Kennedy is famous for her artistic skill and unique arrangements, and her home is undoubtedly one of the most beautiful and pretentious of the city.
The prizes, one for each table, consisted of dainty Dresden after-dinner coffee cups, in the pale pastel shades of pink and blue, in a blur of pink roses and blue forget-me-nots which characterize this ware.
Among those to whom these trophies were awarded were Mrs. Griffiths, Mrs. C. W. Ashford, Mrs. Manuel Phillips, Mrs. M. E. Grossman, Mrs. Frederick B. McStocker, Mrs. Lackland, Mrs. North, Mrs. Frederick Damon, Mrs. Nelson Baker Lansing and Mrs. Kelly of San Francisco.
The consolation, a handsome Hawaiian silver souvenir spoon, was cut for and was won by Mrs. Charles Atherton.
At five delicious chicken patties, various sandwiches, salad, hot rolls, tea, coffee, sherbet, cake, almonds, bon bons and pineapple punch were served, several invited guests who had not cared to play dropping in for tea.
Among those present were Mrs. A. F. Griffiths, Mrs. C. W. Ashford, Mrs. Manuel Phillips, Mrs. Meyer, Mrs. M. E. Grossman, Mrs. Frederick B. McStocker, Mrs. Lackland, Mrs. North, Mrs. Kelly of San Francisco, Mrs. Nelson Baker Lansing, Mrs. Frederick Damon, Miss Marjorie Peterson, Miss Muriel Howatt, Mrs. Frederick Smith, Mrs. Samuel Wright Tav, Mrs. R. R. Reidford, Mrs. White Sutton, Mrs. Harry Marlin Hepburn, Mrs. Augustus E. Murphy, Mrs. Charles Atherton, Mrs. Theodore F. Lansing, Mrs. Frederick Bush, Mrs. Joseph Sheedy, Mrs. Selden Kingsbury, Mrs. Clinton G. Ballentyne, Mrs. Phillip Frear, Mrs. Charles Wilson, Mrs. Frank Richardson, Mrs. Armin Haneberg, Mrs. William L. Whitney, Mrs. Thomas Wall, Mrs. Frank Halstead, Mrs. Frances R. Day, Mrs. Joseph A. Gilman, Mrs. Henry E. Cooper, Miss Julie McStocker, Miss Jessie Kennedy, Mrs. G. W. T. Bottomly, Mrs. Emil Waterman, Mrs. W. C. Hobdy, Mrs. Shepherd, Mrs. Emory and Mrs. James Kennedy.

Many exquisite costumes were seen during this memorable afternoon.
Mrs. Grossman wore a smart creation of gold net, draped over a foundation of champagne satin with Arabian jewel passanterie. Her champagne tinted bonnet, which was very chic, was trimmed with touches of cerise.
Mrs. Manuel Phillips was, as usual, very handsomely gowned in an imported robe of crepe de chine in the new French watermelon shade of pink. Her black Gainsborough chapeau, profusely trimmed with drooping black willow plumes, was very smart.
Mrs. Meyer of San Francisco wore a robe of heavy black satin made in severe lines, and a small black toque, which was very fetching.

Mrs. Murphy was dainty in a frock of white Irish point lace over white satin, and wearing a picture hat of black velvet with willow plumes.
Mrs. Kennedy was very simply gowned in white lingerie, as was her daughter, Miss Jessie Kennedy, who wore additional touches of turquoise satin on her girdle and streamers of satin.
Mrs. Hepburn's gown was an imported model of black satin and Venetian point lace with touches of cerise, and she wore a large Charlotte Corday lace hat with old rose and cerise roses.
Mrs. Nelson Lansing wore a frock of pink striped Pina cloth and a white lingerie hat.
Miss Julie McStocker's frock was of white lace over palest blue satin, and a large blue satin hat trimmed with forget-me-not cabachons.
Mrs. Sheedy, as usual, was very lovely. Her robe of Irish point lace over white satin and her Romney hat with plumes, attracted not a little attention.

Miss Hartwell entertained very informally at luncheon yesterday afternoon as a compliment to Mrs. Eric Alfred Knudsen, who leaves shortly for her home on Kauai.
The circular luncheon table was a-bloom with quantities of golden coreopsis and lace fern, a basket, whose handle was caught with champagne satin, being an attractive centerpiece.
Loose blossoms and lace maidenhair were dropper here and there over the Chuny lace cloth and the guest cards, inscribed for six, were hand-painted baskets of flowers.
At luncheon were Mrs. Eric Knudsen, Mrs. James Judd, Miss Claire Kelly, Mrs. Albert Judd, Miss Ber-
