MEXICO IS NOT LIKE ALL GAUL

Peaceful Arrangement, Says General Sampson, Cannot Be Secured by Dividing Southern Republic into Three Parts

Some time ago, David F. Barrows, professor of political science in the University of California in an article on Mexico declared that peace could be established there only by coercion. The attention of General A. J. Sampson was directed to this article by the Star of Ashtabula, O., where General Sampson is visiting and of the interview with him the Star says: "A Star reporter met General A. J. Sampson, the well known lawyer and diplomat, who was visiting in the city recently. Knowing of his long experience in the American consular and diplomatic service, the reporter asked him what he thought of the plan of settling the Mexican troubles as outlined by Prof. Barrows of the University of California in the Cleveland Press of the 12th inst. He replied: "After what I learned while serving as the American consular and diplomatic representative in Mexico and South America for twelve or fifteen years, under Presidents Harrison, McKinley, Roosevelt and Cleveland for a short time, I cannot agree with some of his conclusions. "He says, 'It would be futile for the United States to attempt to pick a Mexican president, and then he proposes (practically) to divide Mexico into three grand divisions, name three military leaders (presidents) as governors, one for each division, designated for that service by no one, and by no authority and then have the United States enforce this arrangement,' a much more difficult thing than to select a president by the co-operation of the other six Latin American nations, now co-operating with the United States. "Suppose the United States was to attempt to make effective such a division of Mexico, what civil law would govern the people of those three military zones, or would they be under an absolute military despotism, each division governed according to the whim of one of the three designated military rulers, or one-third presidents. "What kind of cohesion would there be between them? None. What commercial and business relations? None. What co-operation for up-building Mexico? None. "But the most important of all arguments against the plan proposed by the professor is the fact that it takes money to run a government or an army (three armies in this case) and that under such an arrangement there could be no Mexican money issued that would be recognized by the three leaders. Neither would recognize the wish of another as to what should be the money of the country. "One of the urgent and absolute needs of Mexico today is a foreign loan to rebuild the 'waste places.' "Mexico must have foreign money to make her government a success. "Under such a plan as proposed by the professor she could not borrow one dollar of foreign money. No lender would accept the security (?) such as she or they could offer. "She has no money now and can not have any until she has a united country with a properly designated ruler. "Let us hope that the plan now being worked out by Washington authorities, in combination with the other nations, may prove a success. "Intervention never. Reasons many."

ALL THINGS COME

"I don't know why we came in here," said Mrs. Bored, as she settled herself down in a restaurant. "I'm not a bit hungry."
"That's all right," said her husband. "Just you sit here and wait."
"Wait? But why? I'm not hungry as I said before."
"Never mind, dear. You will be by the time the waiter brings us our food!"—Philadelphia Record.

GETTING RICH

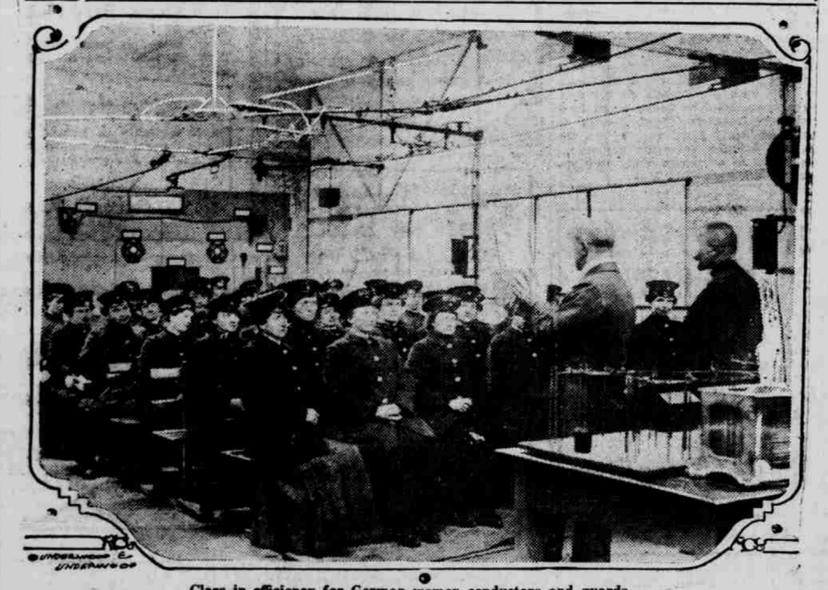

When I first knew him, several years ago, he was a ruddy checked young fellow with a wife and a baby and a modest salary. They lived frugally, were healthy and happy. But he was discontented with the modest salary and went in for getting rich. Now he has a high powered motor car that costs a small fortune in upkeep. He lives in an expensive uptown apartment which boasts an extra bath for the maid. His wife dresses as well as her neighbors, and the little girl has already learned to discriminate according to the social standing of other little girls. He also has acquired a saffron skin and a bad case of dyspepsia, and when I ran across him in the bank rotunda he was grunting about his feelings. "I'm miserable and I don't know what's the matter with me," he said. "I'm getting thinner'n a rail, and I don't like my meals any more. One of the boys told me to go to a 'gym.' I've tried it, but it don't seem to do any good." "Why don't you do a little walking in the good fresh air?" I asked. "No time," he answered. "You might take time for health," I insisted. "Ever try a garden? Since I started mine I've gained ten pounds and feel like a bear." "Tight," he sputtered. "Gardening! I loathe it." "Well, then, golf. That's a rich man's game." "I'm not rich enough yet to afford it," he complained. "When I get enough money so I can take my afternoons off like the nabobs do, then I'll play golf, too." "You might move out into the country where you'll have to walk some distance to your station, or motor into town in an open car—that'd be better than staying in town," I suggested. "The wife wouldn't stand for it," he answered, "and I don't know as I'd care for it myself. We like to be around where things are doing." "You might try going to bed early and getting up early," I mentioned, "and living on bread and milk for a while." "Think of all the fun I'd miss," he grinned. "Are you really having such a lot of fun?" I curiously queried. He shook a pepsin tablet from a little bottle and balanced it thoughtfully on a forefinger. "Search me," he finally remarked. "Sometimes I think I am. Anyway, I've started in to get to the head of the procession and that's some fun, believe me. The wife says she's beginning to have things more the way she wants 'em. Well, I'm glad of that. Little Sophie is getting to be some girl—she goes only with the nicest and she's the prettiest of 'em all when she's dressed up. I don't see much of her these days, but I know she's getting what's coming to her. And me—say, I've had some great times, but I'm not wasting much time in jollifications just yet—too busy. I'm a coming man. When I get there I'll have my good times. I'll rest up then. I'll buy a yacht and go cruising. I'll tour around in my own private car. I'll have a fine big house in every climate, so we can always be comfortable. Just wait till I get the money—I'll go in for all the good things I'll show 'em!" "And among other things, I remarked, "you'll support a number of expensive doctors and be missing all the sweetest, keenest, healthiest joys of this one life you've got to live. And when you've got what you think you want, you'll be wondering why you can't enjoy it." He beighed and swallowed the pepsin tablet. "Crape hanker," he commented.—By Edna K. Woolley.

26 ARE ARRESTED IN AUGUST FOR SPEEDING

The month of August was a busy one for Deputy Sheriff Harrison Williams and an unlucky one for would-be speedsters on the various county roads. Twenty-six speeders were dragged in by Williams, all paying fines of $10, except one motorcyclist who was assessed only $5, seeing as how the only thing wrong with him was that his light was not going. This campaign instituted by Williams has done a great deal towards clearing the county roads, and particularly Central avenue, of speeders of all sorts and varieties. In every case a conviction has been obtained. Williams has been very careful that the subject of observation has really been speeding before the heavy hand of the law laid him low. As the campaign has brought forth such fruitful results in the past, it is to be continued. Williams is going to be out on his trusty little old motorcycle, and will cover most of the well-traveled highways of the county, always with his keen eye alert for the unwary speedster.

FINANCES and MARKETS

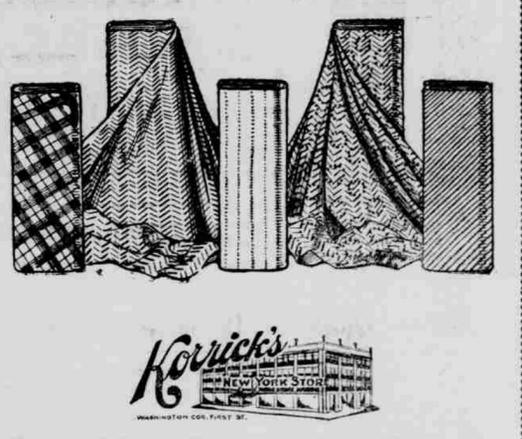

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DISPATCH] NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—Liquidation of American securities for foreign interests was the prevailing influence in trading, superseding as a market factor the settlement of the controversy between Washington and Berlin and the critical international credit situation. European selling was generally accepted as the primary reason for improvement in foreign exchange, which recovered almost all ground lost early in the week, though yielding some of this advantage later. Demand bills on London advanced to between $4.50 and $4.55, as against the low rate of $4.50 established yesterday, and other remittances hardened appreciably. Foreign offerings were mainly active in issues comprising the international list, transcontinental offerings, Erie, United States Steel and coppers. The extent of this selling, which caused recessions of from one to two points, was variously estimated at from forty to fifty thousand shares. Sales of our bonds from similar sources, as denoted by numerous "future" transactions, were also large, approximately $600,000. Specialties, particularly war shares, contributed more than their usual quota to a moderate total, although United States Steel led all others in its customary fashion. Crucible steel was next, with a gain of six points to 88 1/2, fell to 83 at the close. General Motors, which rose 21 points the preceding day, added 2 1/2 to that gain, selling at the new high of 248 and closing at 241. Electric Storage Battery, newly listed and having some claims to recognition because of "was contracts" rose seven points to 76. Total sales amounted to 655,000 shares of a par value that aggregated $3,350,000.
