"Duty Completed" And Our Victory Fleet Speeds Home

By William Hoster

When the great Atlantic fleet, under the command of Admiral E. de R. de Regents, was completed for the exercise of its duties the other day it was an event of some moment. The fleet, which had been in the Mediterranean for several months, was now ready to leave for the Pacific. Its departure was eagerly anticipated by the people of the United States and by the citizens of other countries who had reason to be pleased with its presence on the high seas. The fleet was composed of the battleships New York, Pennsylvania, Texas, and Colorado, and was under the command of Admiral De R. de Regents. The fleet left the harbor of New York on the evening of the 11th of October, 1917, and made its way up the river, passing through the Narrows and entering the Atlantic Ocean through the Strait of Gibraltar.

In the meantime, the German submarines had been active in doing their work. They had scored some successes, but the American fleet was ready to meet them. The German submarines had been forced to retreat, and the American fleet had begun to proceed on its way to the Pacific.

On the 12th of October, the American fleet arrived at the mouth of the Panama Canal. The American battleships were now ready to begin their operations in the Pacific. The fleet was composed of the battleships New York, Pennsylvania, Texas, and Colorado, and was under the command of Admiral De R. de Regents. The fleet left the point of departure and proceeded on its way to the Pacific, passing through the Panama Canal and entering the Pacific Ocean through the Strait of Magellan.

The American fleet was now at sea, and the German submarines were forced to retreat. The American fleet had scored some successes, and the German submarines had been forced to retreat. The American fleet was now ready to begin its operations in the Pacific.

The German fleet was now at sea, and the American fleet was ready to meet it. The American fleet was composed of the battleships New York, Pennsylvania, Texas, and Colorado, and was under the command of Admiral De R. de Regents. The fleet left the point of departure and proceeded on its way to the Pacific, passing through the Panama Canal and entering the Pacific Ocean through the Strait of Magellan.

The American fleet was now at sea, and the German submarines were forced to retreat. The American fleet had scored some successes, and the German submarines had been forced to retreat. The American fleet was now ready to begin its operations in the Pacific.