

A view of the greatest naval event in all history, the surrender of Germany's fleet to the Allies. This picture shows the U-boats passing through the lane formed by British, French and American warships.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

On the British flagship Surrender Day. Left to right, Sir David Beatty, Commander in Chief of the British fleet; Rear Admiral Rodman, U. S. N.; King George, the Prince of Wales and Vice-Admiral Sims, U. S. N.

On board a German submarine. Reports have said the Hun sailors were sullen and disgruntled, but these specimens seem to be enjoying the ignominy. Note the heavy deck guns.

Photo International Film Service.

The U-145 was completed only three months ago and was destined for a "glorious" career. Here she is to-day, lying in a British harbor.

Photo International Film.

On the great day King George paid a visit of state to the dreadnought New York, flagship of the American fleet which took part in the surrender. In the picture he is seen shaking hands with Rear Admiral Rodman.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

Rome celebrates the victory. A section of the vast crowd that for several days and nights took part in the greatest expression of joyful triumph the ancient city by the Tiber has ever known.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.