

A magnificent salvo. The U. S. S. Arizona, while steaming at top speed, lets go all twelve of her 14-inch guns at once in a terrific broadside during winter target practice in Cuban waters. This $16,000,000 super-dreadnought is 600 feet in length, of 31,400 tons displacement, is a sister ship of the U. S. S. Pennsylvania and was launched at the Brooklyn Navy Yard five years ago next June.
Kadel & Herbert

The huge shells of the Arizona's 14-inch guns dropping all around the target. The Arizona is the only super-dreadnought of the navy to carry a white "E" on all her big gun turrets for excellency in marksmanship. The mighty floating fortress also wears a white "E" on nine of the twenty-two 5-inch rifles of her secondary battery and carries the same coveted emblem on her fire control tower.
Kadel & Herbert

Left—A heavy fur helmet, a bulky but warm sheepskin lined coat and thick fur-lined boots help this young Russian to withstand the rigors of a Siberian winter. With his double-barreled shotgun, the lad, one of the crack shots of Irkutsk, stands guard, his keen eyes on the lookout for Reds.
H. Broadsky

The winning smile of Guy Nickalls, English coach of the Yale crews. Nickalls, on his recent return to America, immediately took charge of the 200 candidates and hopes to turn out another winner, as he did in 1914 and 1915. Although fifty-four years old, Nickalls, when Yale suspended athletics in 1917, enlisted in the British army and served as an engineer.
Keystone

Right—This Chinese "ragged" man is a Mongolian beggar monk collecting money along the Russian frontier for his monastery. In Mongolia the eldest son must be a monk or a lama, and a lama never works, depending on alms for his support. Ourga, with its 10,000 lamas, is a veritable city of beggars.
H. Broadsky

Millard J. Bloomer Jr., captain of the Columbia fencing team. Columbia is two-time winner of the intercollegiate fencing championship and is out for the title for the third time. Captain Bloomer, who is individual intercollegiate champion, recently won the U. S. dueling sword championship despite the fact that he was the youngest contender.
Central News

Hugh C. Wallace, United States Ambassador to France, speaks at the commemorative ceremony held at the base of Washington's statue in Paris on February 22. Included in the floral wreaths which were laid on the statue by American residents were two unusually splendid ones from the Y. M. C. A. and K. of C.
Central News