REAL COMPETITION SAVED
$10,000 A DAY FOR UNCLE SAM
How Navy Department Effected Saving of $3,156,677 During Past Year by Enforcement of Competition Among Bidders for Armor Plate and Projectile Contracts and by Cutting Down Expenses in Every Possible Branch of the Service

When the bids for the armor for the battleship Texas have been opened by the Secretary of the Navy, it was announced that the bids were so low as to make a saving of $10,000 a day for Uncle Sam. This saving, it is believed, will be increased by the enforcement of competition by the Navy Department in every possible branch of the service.

The saving of $10,000 a day is due to the competition among bidders for the armor plate for the battleship Texas. The price of armor plate has been lowered due to the competition, and the saving will be increased by the enforcement of competition by the Navy Department in every possible branch of the service.

The Navy Department has been successful in saving money by cutting down expenses in every possible branch of the service. The savings have been made by competition among bidders, by cutting down the price of supplies, and by improving the methods of doing business.

The Navy Department has been successful in saving money by cutting down expenses in every possible branch of the service. The savings have been made by competition among bidders, by cutting down the price of supplies, and by improving the methods of doing business.

The Navy Department has been successful in saving money by cutting down expenses in every possible branch of the service. The savings have been made by competition among bidders, by cutting down the price of supplies, and by improving the methods of doing business.

The Navy Department has been successful in saving money by cutting down expenses in every possible branch of the service. The savings have been made by competition among bidders, by cutting down the price of supplies, and by improving the methods of doing business.

The Navy Department has been successful in saving money by cutting down expenses in every possible branch of the service. The savings have been made by competition among bidders, by cutting down the price of supplies, and by improving the methods of doing business.

The Navy Department has been successful in saving money by cutting down expenses in every possible branch of the service. The savings have been made by competition among bidders, by cutting down the price of supplies, and by improving the methods of doing business.