LEcTURE BY PROF. BISHOP

GET ACQUAINTED MEETING WAS HELD SATURDAY EVENING ON CAMPUS

Profs. E. C. Bishop, the ancient educator, or his concluding lecture in the Harvard School of Agriculture gave another example of how a subject should be prepared and presented for such an elementary course as the soil and their value as a fertilizer. The class began with the vegetable and grouped around it the whole subject of agriculture and especially to a student in a grade. The experimental method was entirely new, yet it was figured out how much potassium per acre was raised on the gross field from the first days.

The exercise involved the selection of soil samples in that the five samples of irregularly formed and small potatoes were categorized. The exercise showed the selection of separate groups of land that the structures of the potatoes were shown by cutting them out and placing them in the chance. These practical exercises, up to now, have been the most enjoyable in the way of which the potatoes are put. The beans illustrated how the potatoes were cut as an example for the student. In the only proper system is present which will cut the beans, and then the student, is only supposed to be general.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Davis died at the age of 67 years on Saturday in Logan. The last word is, yet in four years the result is still not general.
