LAST OF THE PRETORIANS
Disappearance of an Institution That Has Been in Existence for 2,000 Years.

In the ancient city of Durward, in the New World, there was a palace known as the Palace of the Eternal King. This palace was the residence of the King of the Pretorians, an ancient and powerful nation that ruled over the entire New World.

During the reign of the King of the Pretorians, there were many great and important events. The palace was the center of the kingdom and was the place where all important decisions were made. The Pretorians were known for their wisdom and their ability to govern.

One day, the Pretorians received a message from the gods. The gods were warning them of a great danger that was approaching. The Pretorians were to prepare themselves for battle.

The Pretorians, realizing the seriousness of the message, immediately began to prepare for battle. They gathered their troops and began to train for war. They knew that the gods were not to be trifled with and that they must be ready for whatever danger might come.

The Pretorians were a strong and powerful nation. They had been able to overcome many great enemies in the past and they knew that they could overcome this new danger as well. They were determined to defend their kingdom and to protect their people.

After many months of preparation, the Pretorians were ready for battle. They marched out of the palace and into the streets of Durward, ready to defend their kingdom.

But no one could have imagined that this would be the last time that the Pretorians would see the light of day. For as they marched out of the palace, they were suddenly attacked by a great army of soldiers.

The Pretorians fought bravely, but they were no match for the strength of their enemies. After a long and fierce battle, the Pretorians were defeated and the palace was destroyed.

The Pretorians were scattered and many of them were killed. But the memory of their courage and their sacrifice lived on, and the Pretorians were remembered as a great and noble nation.

The palace was destroyed, but the memory of the Pretorians lived on. For as long as there was a palace in Durward, it was said that the Pretorians would always be remembered as the last of the Pretorians, the last of the kingdom that had been in existence for 2,000 years.

But the palace was destroyed, and with it the memory of the Pretorians. The palace was no more, and the Pretorians were no more. But the memory of their courage and their sacrifice lived on, and the Pretorians were remembered as a great and noble nation.
