Comparative Lack of Odor Within Shell Indicates Only Bones Remain-Rubbish To Be Removed Today

A MIDNIGHT the fierce excitement of a fire from the work. For half an hour earlier an inspection was made at one-thirty o'clock this morning. No bodies were found. The face of the middle compartment is littered with rubbly plates and other debris, probably all that remains, must have been burned hereafter.

There was no sign of them in the after compartment, either. The first compartment cannot be entered because of the great rent in the starboard side, but it is believed that the men were there. Work ended at one-thirty o'clock this morning. It will begin again at eight o'clock.

Details in the second compartment must be obtained before recovery of the bodies is possible. That will require much work.

Lorie B. Cottrell, commander of the submarine, said that there had been no time for an inspection of the submarine to determine the cause of the disaster, and that, had there been no inspection, any theory that the bodies were still on board could not be given without the permission of the Navy Department.
