

Above, the Medal of Honor, highest award of the United States for gallantry in battle. At bottom, the new Distinguished Service Cross, the next highest award.

Copyright, Bailey, Banks & Biddle Co. from Harris & Ewing.

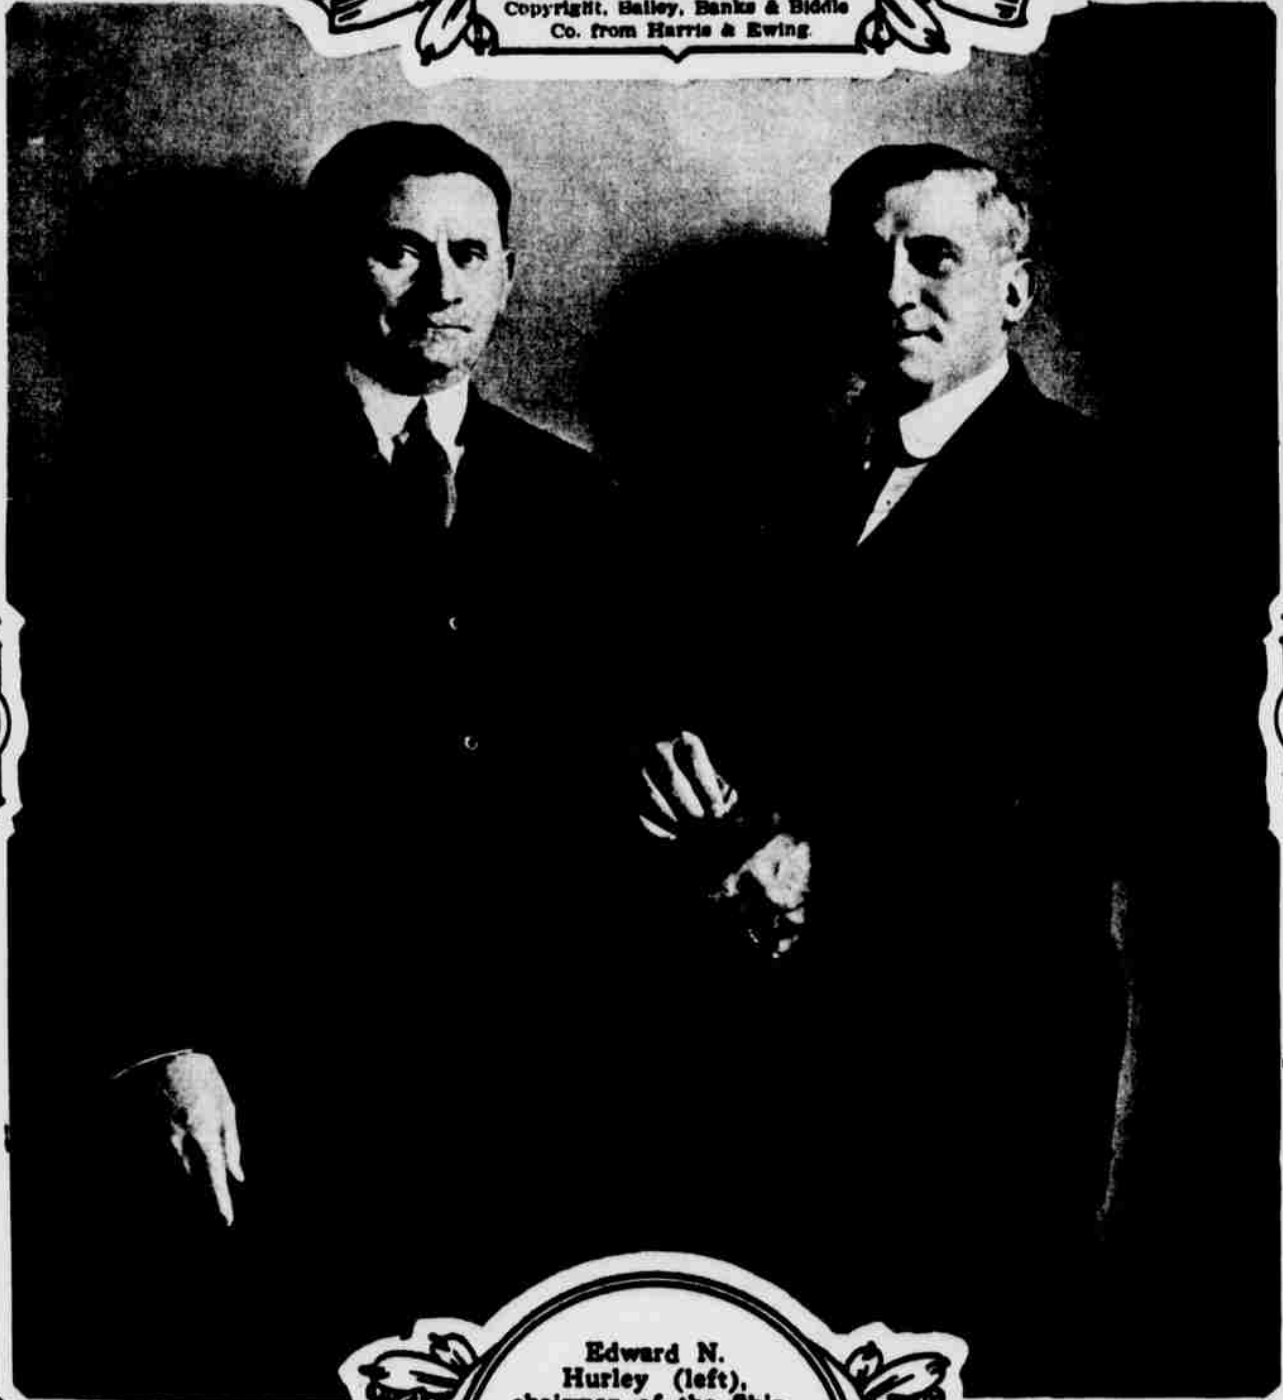

On April 6 the United States soldiers and sailors assembled at the Y. M. C. A. Eagle Hut in London of their own volition sent the following telegram: "To Gen. Pershing: This is the anniversary of the first year of America's entry into the world war, but you can count on us for as many more years as are necessary to bring a decisive victory for the Allies."

Photo by International Film.

On the deck of an American submarine out on the Atlantic during fleet manoeuvres. Wigwagging other vessels while the officers await orders.

Copyright, Committee on Public Information.

Edward N. Hurley (left), chairman of the Shipping Board, and Charles M. Schwab, Director-General of the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Copyright, Harris & Ewing, from Paul Thompson.

Here are some of the men still in this country who are ready to subscribe to the ringing message of their fellow warriors abroad to the Commander-in-Chief. They comprise an infantry brigade in training at a cantonment somewhere in the South. The photograph was taken while the troops were out on a practice march and were halted for rest.

Copyright, 1918, Committee on Public Information.

Ambassador Page at the celebration in London on the anniversary of America's entry into the war as the guest of our fighting men.

Photo by International Film.

American soldiers in France learning the latest methods of making an attack. At a spot just behind the front the men were sent forward under actual trench conditions. This is one of the last steps in the preparatory work.

Photo from Underwood & Underwood.

The last trench upon the sea. This is at Lombaertzyde, in Belgium, where the long allied line, starting on the Swiss border, ends thus with a view of the English Channel. The post is held by the Belgians and the French.

Photo from International Film.