GENERAL MARIANO G. VALLEJO

Mariano Guadalupe Vallejo was born in Monterey July 7, 1807, son of Don Ignacio Vallejo, a highly-respected citizen of New Spain, and Maria Antonia Lugo Vallejo. He was the eighth child of thirteen. It was his parents wish that he should know more about every activty of the Spanish of California than any other man and nothing was left undone to give him the best education the period afforded.

On January 8, 1824 Vallejo entered the military forces as a cadet, in the Monterey Company for the purpose of studying to become an officer in the army.

Mariano G. Vallejo was not only one of the most colorful figures, but one of the most prominent men brought forth during the turbulent pioneer days of California history. He served faithfully as an official, either in the military, diplomatic or political fields of three nations in California and was a citizen of four such countries all of which exercised dominion over California during the life of the General.

He was elected as a delegate to the first State Constitutional Convention in 1848, helped draw up the first Constitution and also became one of its first State Senators.

In 1832 General Vallejo was married to the former Francisca Benicia Carrillo and their home was in and near Sonoma. They were the parents of sixteen children and mention is made of several adopted ones.

General Vallejo's name has been mentioned in almost every book of history dealing with early California development. His name appears everywhere—streets, a city, steamers, people, and now a Polaris submarine (SSBN 658).
